Spelling has always been important - indeed, very severe judgements are made about those who cannot spell with a high degree of accuracy. Spelling Patterns is not simply a some-how organised list of words intended for memorisation by rote learning, it is a developmental program that presents words as meaningful and allows, through various solo, group, and teacher-led activities, their gradual and multiplied assimilation. A central premise of the program is that to know one word is to know all other words of like graphemic patterns. Spelling Patterns places emphasis on patterns, not sounds because written language is essentially a visual (rather than aural) signalling system. Lists of words must be related - thematically, sometimes by pattern, but with the challenge always, to explore like forms.
