Excerpt: ... Muir to proceed on his voyage to Philadelphia, domiciled at Paris (au citoyen de Coudile, Hotel de Toulon, No. 1 rue des Foses du Temple) municipality of Paris, native of Scotland, a lawyer, 28 years of age, 5 feet 9 inches high, his hair and eye-lashes of a chestnut colour, bright blue eyes, aquiline nose, small mouth, round chin, high forehead, long and full face. Send him aid and assistance if in want. Signed by us, Ministers of Foreign Affairs, Paris, 29th April, 1793, second year of Republic,-- Le Brun; Maille Garat; Nicoleau Presid." This friendly Passport brought him safely through France; and at one of the French ports he got on board the American ship "Hope," Capt. George Towers, ostensibly bound for Baltimore, but hailing for Belfast. In July 1793 he reached Belfast, landed, and hired a small vessel to carry him across to Portpatrick, in Scotland, with now the obvious and firm resolution to proceed to Edinburgh to meet his accusers at all hazards. From Portpatrick he posted on to Stranraer, and while reposing himself in one of the inns of that place, after his long fatiguing journey, openly avowing his name, and telling of his pursuits, Mr. Boniface of the inn, took alarm, beat up all the legal functionaries of the place, who, with others, soon assembled and bellowed around him, like a pack of furies or blood-hounds in full cry. Instantly the intelligence of his arrest at Stranraer, was sent to the law officers of the Crown in Edinburgh. It was joyful news to them, for they had their victim now, they thought, securely within their grasp; and the Lord Advocate lost not a moment in drawing out and placing his "warrant in the hands of George Williamson, Messenger-at-Arms, in Edinburgh, who, with one or two trusty concurrents, 'were ordered off to Stranrae...
